Natural Gas Release, Porter Ranch, Los Angeles County, SPILL: 16-7798

On 12/24/16 at 1413 hours, the California State Warning Center (CSWC) received a report from Southern California Gas Company (SoCal Gas) advising of an unknown amount of natural gas vapor releasing from the Aliso Canyon Storage Facility, wellhead #SS25. The release was discovered on 12/24/16 at approximately 0745 hours as part of daily patrols and inspections a very slight and intermittent observation of methane was detected utilizing infrared camera technology (FLIR) at the #SS25 wellhead at the Aliso Canyon Storage Facility.

- On 12/26/16, the CSWC received an update from SoCal Gas. They continue to monitor conditions at the site. Slight off-gassing continues, with no change in conditions and no other anomalies identified. There are no detectable odors and there is no indication of a present or potential hazard to human health, safety or the environment.
- SoCal Gas believes this is a continuation of off-gassing from the soil that has previously been observed at other locations at the site. This recent off-gassing of the soil coincides with the recent intense rain events at the site and is not believed to pose a present or potential hazard to human health, safety, or the environment.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weak weather system is currently moving through the Pacific Northwest. Precipitation remains well to our north, but high cloudiness and a slightly warming air mass helped to keep overnight temperatures a few degrees warmer than the last few nights. A few light showers will be possible across the northern mountains later today, otherwise dry weather is expected to continue through the rest of the work week. Overnight temperatures will continue to be a few degrees below normal the next few nights, but we don't expect hard freeze conditions under building high pressure and a warming air mass.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A ridge of high pressure over California will bring a warming and drying trend to the region through Thursday. Maximum temperatures will be near normal today with 40s to low 50s across the mountains, 50s to low 60s in the valleys of Central California, and 60s to low 70s in the valleys of Southern California. Temperatures will warm to around 10 degrees above normal by Thursday. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% away from the San Joaquin Valley today and then drop into the single digits and teens Wednesday and Thursday. Northeast to east winds of 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 35 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California through Thursday afternoon. A weak area of low pressure from the southwest will move inland across Central and Southern California bringing showers to the region Friday. Most locations will receive less than a half inch of rainfall with this low. The snow level will be above 8,000 feet. Another low will drop down the West Coast bringing between 1 and 2 inches of rainfall to most locations Saturday. The snow level will drop to between 4,000 and 5,000 feet Saturday. Some leftover showers will be possible, especially over the mountains, Sunday as a Pacific trough remains in place. Temperatures will cool significantly Friday through this weekend, with well below normal temperatures this weekend. There will be southerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph across the mountain ridges and desert passes Saturday and then winds will become westerly 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph across the wind prone mountain and desert areas Sunday.
